

MY employee newsletter

NC EAP | 888.298.3907 | mygroup.com

Intervene to Manage Financial Stress

📄 et help from your North Carolina employee assistance program (NC EAP) if you are under financial stress. The NC EAP can help in several ways. First, you can find information and forms to help you know where to start and what data to gather. For example, in the Financial section of the work-life website, you can find articles like "Investing 101" and forms like "Loan Comparison Worksheet." Check out the online seminar "Money Matters: Navigating Emotions for Financial Wellbeing." Next, call the NC EAP to get a referral to a certified financial planner. These professionals can work with you on goals like creating a budget or buying a car. Finally, be sure your plan includes health and wellness activities to overcome the ill effects of financial stress. Taking daily walks, practicing meditation, or eating a healthy diet can decrease anxiety without adding to money woes. Don't wait for your financial stress to become a crisis - help is available.

Stress Management Tip: Don't Wait to Enrich Your Life

would love to learn Italian...Volunteering at the children's hospital would be so satisfying... Someday I will learn the piano..." Start now! Pursue satisfying activities you dream of rather than waiting for the perfect time someday. These enriching activities can give fulfillment and joy and directly enhance well-being, productivity, and help prevent burnout. When you are happier and more content, your productivity increases because a positive mindset fosters creativity, better problem-solving skills, and improved focus. This causes you to be more engaged on the job. Starting, even in the smallest way possible, can bring balance to your busy life.

Dealing with Difficult Personalities thousand books exist on "dealing with difficult people." Nearly all elaborate on skills, labels, interventions, and coping strategies. But there is an overarching skill for having fewer problems with difficult personalities, and it is your ability to build a foundation of trust with coworkers. The vast majority of workplace problems relate to communication, and building a foundation of trust makes good communication thrive. Issues and problems are more quickly and more frequently addressed. There's increased transparency, a more positive workplace, reduced fear among workers, fewer suspicions, less wasted energy, and more valued constructive feedback. Check out the article "Building a Collaborative Team Environment" on the work-life webpage.

Back to School: Preventing Bullying at School

any parents worry about bullying in school. Early intervention and prevention are possible with proactive communication that encourages openness with the parent, but gentle probing might be needed because some children will resist sharing their victimization. Resistance stems from fear that the bully will retaliate, embarrassment or shame about being bullied, or fear that the parent might recommend some action that would add to the torment. Some might believe that the parent's help would be futile. And some children's desire for independence may drive them to remain silent and deal with the bullying on their own. Knowing these reasons for silence can help you have a more empathetic conversation with your child so you can help prevent bullying victimization.

Resource: www.stopbullying.gov/resources/get-help-now

Mentally Prepare for a Better Day

ften, our mood or emotional state is dictated by what's happening around us at any given moment, and we react to each situation as it occurs. However, we have the power to make choices about how we feel and respond. Taking time before work and mentally preparing for the day is a perfect opportunity to practice this life skill. Doing so allows you to work as the real you with an unforced, positive frame of mind. How to do it: 1) Spend 15 minutes in mindful meditation to clear your mind and visualize positive expectations and outcomes for the day. 2) Use deep breathing exercises. Deep breathing exercises improve focus and concentration. This calms you and helps the visualized messages sink in and feel more certain. 3) Listen to motivational podcasts. Motivational podcasts (or tapes) shift your focus from negative thoughts to positive ones and they can excite you about possibilities that boost your mood. 4) Create your own playlist of uplifting songs. This works because upbeat songs release neurotransmitters like dopamine, which lift your mood. 5) Reflect on gratitude-what you are thankful for? This practice has numerous payoffs, but one that will show at work is your more optimistic perspective where challenges are seen instead as opportunities. (This is called having a "growth mindset.") 6) Finally, don't let your day just simply happen. Be intentional. This means planning not just what you want to accomplish, but also how you would like to feel today, taking charge of your mood and what happens to it.

Victim of Sexual Harassment, But Unsure about Next Steps?

mployees who are victims of sexual harassment often feel uncertain about how to seek help. Despite clear workplace policies, victims may feel confused about their situation. For instance, you might have experienced multiple incidents of harassment but downplayed their seriousness to "keep the peace," leaving you feeling stuck and unable to act. You may fear retaliation despite assurances to the contrary or worry that your memory of events is unclear, which could undermine your complaint. Some victims hesitate to come forward, fearing their concerns will be dismissed by someone replying "that doesn't sound so bad." Reach out to the employee assistance program to gain clarity on your experiences, feel support, and learn about the next steps so you feel empowered to follow your organization's relevant policy and get the help you need.

Tips for Managing Fear of Job Loss

ne national survey last January reported 84% of employees were worried about a layoff this year. Coping with the fear of job loss can be challenging, so find strategies for managing "layoff anxiety." Consider the following to be better prepared, feel more in control, and prepare for possibly new future opportunities: 1) Continuously improve your skills. Don't appear as though you've "plateaued." 2) Share your fears and get advice from trusted persons who can provide emotional support. 3) Engage in stress management activities to relieve tension, experience positive distraction, and maintain a healthy work-life balance. 4) Build an emergency financial cushion and combine it with reducing unnecessary expenses. (The act of doing so relieves or lessens fear.) 5) Talk with your supervisor. Express your concerns. They may know little, but their view or perspective may spell relief. 6) Keep your work quality high. When layoff decisions come employees perceived as indispensable sometimes have more opportunities presented to them.

Source: www.hrotoday.com/news (Search "84 percent worried")

Small Habits with Big Benefits

The task clears mental clutter and gives you a sense of order and control. This can carry over to other tasks and goals in your life. Can you think of other habits that pro-mote mental clutter self-esteem, foster discipline, and reduce stress? Statistics: Sleepdoctor.com (Search "make your bed")